

Design Intern
at the Center for Collective Learning at Corvinus University of Budapest

The Center for Collective Learning \(CCL\) is a hub for data science research, with a focus on economic geography, urban science, and complex systems under the leadership of Professor César Hidalgo, a world-class researcher in data science, economic geography, and network science.

The Lab is working on various projects that require visualisations of data in different aspects and for a wide range of target groups.

For designing user interface for data visualisations we need a part-time (10 to 20 hours/week)

Design Intern to support the work of the data engineer and the researcher group.

About you:

- You are attending a Master programme in design, or you are in your senior years at your undergraduate studies.
- You have strong graphic design skills and proven records of applying them.
- You have experience in designing UI/UX for the web.
- You have a good understanding of numerical data and their representations on graphs and charts (e.g. using logarithmic scale) and inspiration for working with them.
- You can do mock-ups in Figma and preferably can also implement them in CSS.
- You are eager to work with JavaScript developers. If you already have experience with JS or you can even do it yourself that is a great plus.

What we offer:

- You can become a part of a dynamic, enthusiastic, and professional international team.
- You can work in flexible work hours from an office with great view on the Danube and Gellert Hill or you can also work from home (partially).
- You can work part time during the summer in 2023, schedule is a matter of negotiation, but July will be the most intense period.
- Long term collaboration can be an option upon mutual satisfaction.
- Competitive salary (higher than usual student work).

Place of work:

Hybrid, Corvinus University of Budapest, 1093 Budapest, Közraktár utca 4-6.
